Fund manager's comment

The fund was negative for the quarter. Stock markets presented divergent returns, with European markets moving upwards, while the US stocks followed an opposite course, and the dollar moved sharply downwards. Returns in Asian markets also showed significant dispersion, with China exhibiting better performance. Greek stocks recorded strongly positive returns, supported by improved profitability and high dividend yields. Divergent trends were also present in the actions of central banks. The ECB proceeded with two interest rate cuts of 25 basis points each, in January and March. In contrast, the Fed maintained interest rates unchanged. Government bond markets were positive in the US and negative in Europe, with Greek government bonds significantly outperforming. Corporate bonds continued to outperform, remaining at the same price levels. Major economies are facing different priorities and strategies to address. The trajectory of corporate earnings in this environment is difficult to predict, and we await more information from company management teams with the announcements of the first-quarter results.
